

ABSTRACT

The invention provides a luminous element that includes a light-guiding device in which light is guided by reflection. The light-guiding device has at least one light-scattering area with light-scattering structures. The light-scattering structures can be applied to the surface of the light-scattering area. The luminous element also includes at least one light entry surface that is coupled to at least one organic light-emitting diode.